“ There are too many memories to share. It was my honor and privilege to be your granddaughter. I had spent the last few years angry because dementia had taken you from us. But what outweighs the disease is the memories you gave me. You and Memmie raised me. You raised me, loved me, nurtured me, and taught me. I can still see your fingers on the guitar the very first time you taught me to play. The excitement of you rounding up microphones for singing in the garage once I started singing. The days in the garage spent with beloved customers and the many lifelong friendships made... They became family. The Big Joe Polka and Marry Stuart show... Chasing Josh with a face drawn on your belly button lolol good memories. My childhood memories. You made them. It was my honor to buy you your Zonic burger and milky ways and diet cokes, Cheetos... You told those boys they were little farts before you left. They loved that. I love you and I am happy you are reunited with so many you had loved and missed for years and told countless stories about. What a reunion. I thank you, and I will take care of Memmie just as you all took such good care of me. Much appreciated. -Lissy Poo “ Known "Bubby and Polly" for many years, I can't imagine the heartbreak your whole family is going through. Know that we love you and we care for you.

If you were blessed enough to be called friend, then you know you were family. Many memories in the Moore's Garage, around the dinner table and in the backyard.

I can see "Bubby" now, shaking hands with all his western favorites (John Wayne, Hopalong Cassidy, etc), telling everyone about his western room, hugging his family & friends tight.

Until I see you again my friend, know you were loved by thousands.
